

TimetoPay

Brand Guidelines — Version 2.0 (teal)

This replaces the earlier violet identity. Every value here is pulled directly from artifacts/receiver/tracker/constants/colors.ts, the single source of truth the app itself reads its theme from — so this document can never drift further from the shipping product than that file does.

Use this alongside Canva's Brand Kit editor (Brand Hub !' Brand Kits) — Canva has no import for a PDF like this one; it's a reference to type the hex codes from, not a file Canva reads.

Using These Colors

- Deep Teal is the one color that should always read as "TimetoPay" — the app icon, primary buttons, links, and the tab-bar active state all use it.
- Sage and Magenta are semantic, not decorative: sage always means a good price or a savings figure, magenta always means a price increase or a destructive action. Don't swap them in for variety.

Navy-Purple is dark-mode-only. It never appears as a light-mode color, and light mode never uses pure black or pure white as a surface — background is an off-white (#F7F6F9), matching the same restraint dark mode applies to its own near-black.

- Keep enough contrast between text and its background to stay legible — the app targets WCAG AA contrast on every token pair listed here.
